Prix Fixe

This recent branch of the Pierre Victoire chain does a set lunch costing £8.90 for two courses, while the prix fixe set dinner is £10.90 for two courses – not too shabby a deal either. The interior's surprisingly spacious and done up in classic French bistro style. A starter of grilled sardines was fresh and nicely cooked, and the main course chef's salad with smoked chicken had just the right balance of flavours in the dressing. Other options on the set menu included lamb shashlik with thyme-roasted root vegetables. If you're tempted away from the prix fixe menu to the à la carte, then prices soar, but there doesn't seem to be any corner-cutting on the prix fixe menu. Service was professional and a service charge of 12.5 per cent (ie £1.11 each) was added – pushing us over our planned budget by 1p each (to £20.02). But we didn't grudge them a penny of it.
